Intent of the poem

- ✓ All beauty, love and happiness come from God.

I begged the almond-tree: "Speak to me-of God!"
And the almond-tree showed itself in full bloom.

I was a poor man and asked some one "Please, speak to me, of God!"
And that man gave me his cloak.

I besought my dreams: "Speak to me of God!"
And my dreams came true.

I entreated the house: "Speak to me of God!"
And the door opened welcoming me.

I asked a child: "Speak to me of God!"
And the child smiled at me!

I told a farmer: "Speak to me of God!"
And the farmer showed me the standing crops.

I begged nature: "Speak to me of God!"
And nature decked herself with luscious beauty.

I asked my friend: "Speak to me of God!"
And my friend caressed me warmly.

I asked a nightingale: "Speak to me of God!"
And she filled the air with silvery tunes.

I asked a soldier: "Speak to me of God!"
And in shame, he threw away his weaponry.

I besought a suffering man: "Speak to me ' of God!"
And I saw in his eyes a quivering tear of accepting joy.

I asked a fountain: "Speak to me of God!"
And the fountain merrily spilled out its crystal water.

I begged my mother: "Please, speak to me of Cod!"
And she stamped a soothing kiss on my forehead.

I entreated my enemy: "Speak to me of God!"
And he, in forgiveness, stretched out his hand to me.

I asked the voice: "Speak to me of God!"
And the voice could not find words enough to answer. It remained silent.

At last, I asked the setting sun: "Speak to me of God!"
And the sun, mysteriously, set down and left me in darkness,.
Next day, at dawn, when I opened the window of my room,
Mischievously stamped a warm kiss on both my cheeks!
